The new video focuses on Canadian mechanical contractor, Nu-Mun Contracting, and its use of innovative labor saving rough plumbing products by Sioux Chief.

Kansas City, Missouri - April 22, 2014 – Rough plumbing manufacturer, Sioux Chief, launched a new video focused on Canadian mechanical contractor, Nu-Mun Contracting, in Calgary, Alberta.

Sioux Chief manufactures plumbing products for mechanical contractors all over North America, and produced the video to highlight its Canadian presence as well as its understanding of the contractor's business.

The contractor profile video focuses on the building of the Encore Condos at Kincora in Calgary, Alberta. Sioux Chief products are specified and used in both commercial and residential construction projects.

“Sioux Chief offers a lot of product and we're ordering more and more. With them able to build special product for us, that is giving us that much more of an edge over our competition,” said Doug Muncaster, President of Nu-Mun Contracting.

Muncaster says reputable contractors must perform a quality job every time, but the products being installed must also enable the contractor to gain measurable savings at the time of installation.

Sioux Chief products like the OxBox are designed to save labor and hold up to any job site abuse.

“Using Sioux Chief products, we save between 200 and 500 man hours on large commercial projects,” said David Muncaster, with Nu-Mun Mechanical Contracting.

“If our competitors aren't utilizing Sioux Chief products, that just means we get more jobs, because we're able to quote jobs tighter,” says David Muncaster.
